DISCUSSION: The Director, Texas Service Center, denied the employment-based immigrant visa petition. The matter is now before the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO) on appeal. The AAO will summarily dismiss the appeal.

The petitioner seeks classification pursuant to section 203(b)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act), 8 U.S.C. § 1153(b)(2), as a member of the professions holding an advanced degree. The petitioner seeks employment as a physician specializing in nephrology. The petitioner asserts that an exemption from the requirement of a job offer, and thus of a labor certification, is in the national interest of the United States. The director found that the petitioner qualifies for classification as a member of the professions holding an advanced degree, but that the petitioner had not established that an exemption from the requirement of a job offer would be in the national interest of the United States.

8 C.F.R. § 103.3(a)(1)(v) states, in pertinent part, “[a]n officer to whom an appeal is taken shall summarily dismiss any appeal when the party concerned fails to identify specifically any erroneous conclusion of law or statement of fact for the appeal.”

On the Form I-290B Notice of Appeal, counsel checked a box reading “My brief and/or additional evidence is attached.” Counsel did not indicate that any future supplement would follow. Therefore, the initial appellate submission constitutes the entire appeal. The petitioner submitted no exhibits on appeal except for a copy of the denial notice. Counsel states:

The record reflects through [the petitioner’s] leading roles at prominent medical institutes along with his history of original and pioneering publications and significant contributions to the field of nephrology that [the petitioner] has demonstrated that (1) his work has had substantial intrinsic merit; (2) the impact of his work has spread beyond his hospital community and had a significant national influence in improving healthcare; and (3) [the petitioner’s] abilities are extraordinary and stand above his peers, such that a waiver of the labor certification process would be in the national interest.

Counsel does not elaborate as to the nature of the claimed “leading roles” and “significant contributions.” The director, in the denial notice, had questioned earlier, similar claims by counsel. Counsel cannot rebut the director’s findings simply by repeating the vague assertion that the petitioner’s work has been important.

In a separate statement accompanying the appeal form, counsel maintains that the petitioner “has judged the work of even senior peers” and that “there are testimonials submitted showing that he has been indispensable” to the university department where he worked. Counsel does not, however, allege any specific factual or legal errors or other deficiencies in the director’s decision. Counsel merely asserts that, given (unidentified) “substantial evidence” of the petitioner’s (unspecified) achievements, the director should have approved the petition. The director, in the denial notice, had acknowledged the “testimonials” mentioned by counsel, but found them to be unsubstantiated. Counsel does not respond to this finding.

Counsel asserts “clear evidence was submitted showing that in particular [the petitioner] has made great contributions to the field through both his research work as well as clinical abilities, both well attested to by both his peers with whom he has worked as well as independent testimonials.” The director, in the denial notice, acknowledged the witnesses’ letters and quoted from several of them, but found that the letters failed to distinguish the petitioner from other qualified professionals in his specialty. Counsel does not address the director’s concerns, instead simply commenting on the letters’ presence in the record.

Counsel asserts that the petitioner’s “record of publication is very impressive as is his record of presentation at major conferences. He has also sustained citations in prominent journals.” The director had acknowledged the petitioner’s published and cited work, but found that the petitioner had not established the significance of this work. Calling the petitioner’s work “impressive” on appeal is not a rebuttal of the director’s finding.

Counsel asserts that the petitioner “is a member of the most prominent medical societies in the country.” Counsel acknowledges that these medical societies do not require outstanding achievements as a condition of membership, but states that “this is the norm.” The director, however, did not raise the issue of the petitioner’s memberships as a basis for denial. Counsel does not explain how these memberships establish eligibility for the national interest waiver; the prestige of a society does not necessarily reflect on each individual member thereof.

In sum, counsel does not explain how the director failed to take the petitioner’s previous evidence into consideration. Counsel does not allege any specific factual or legal errors or other deficiencies in the director’s decision. Counsel, in effect, merely asserts that the director should have approved the petition, which is not a sufficient basis for a substantive appeal.

The AAO notes that, on May 2, 2011, an employer applied for a labor certification on the petitioner’s behalf. The Department of Labor approved the labor certification, and USCIS approved a subsequent immigrant petition based on that labor certification. Thus, the petitioner has obtained the very labor certification that counsel, earlier, had claimed was unobtainable. The same employer filed a nonimmigrant petition on the alien’s behalf, and USCIS approved that petition. Therefore, the petitioner is authorized to work until October 6, 2014 for the employer that obtained the labor certification.

Because counsel has failed to identify specifically an erroneous conclusion of law or a statement of fact as a basis for the appeal, the AAO must summarily dismiss the appeal.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.
